the Ruins of Old Methods. The Anthropological society met last evening in the Army Medical museum, President Maj. J. W. Powell in the chair. A list of corresponding members was read, including the most distinguished anthropologists in America. The following papers were read and discussed: "Discontinuities in Nature's Methods," by Mr. H. H. Bates, and "Migratious of the Sionan Tribes," by Rev. J. Owen Dorsey, Mr. Bates spoke briefly of the marked gaps occurring in the passage from the mineral to the organic kingdom, from one class to another, and from invertebrate to vertebrate, and then proceeded to discuss the application of his subject to man. All the great steps in advance made by our race have been due to the decay or discontinuity of ancient methods, and the setting up of new processes that started man onward again into new and higher paths. The inventive faculty of man, disregarding old manners and systems, emsucipated and simulated his mind, and has been the most potent factor in these benigh discontinuities. Ancient ruins everywhere staring us in the face are silent witnesses of continued recording of old things. In earlier ages of the world even beauty was secured by selection; and discussed: "Discontinuities in Nature's distinct of the control of the world even beauty was secured by selection; by means of invention, selection giving place to a new departure. The most wonderfully efficient apparatus in use among us could never have been worked out by natural selection; the inventive brain of man has traversed this law and set up new orders of things.

As there have been no stimuli to sudden chances in othics or sociology in later centu-ries they have not taken place, and we have, An alarm of fire was turned in from box therefore, little to observe as to improvement in this direction. Discontinuities have not always been beneficial, and may not be in the future. A cosmic Winter may reduce our race to its lowest capabilities again, and man the what is the three string in the what, the walrus, or the seal, a ruined monument of former glory. The paper was discussed by Prof. Ward, Dr. Welling, President Powell, Prof. Mason, Prof. Cyrus Thomas, and others.
